The University of Sydney is Australia's premier University with an outstanding global reputation for academic and research excellence, and employs over 7500 permanent staff supporting over 49,000 students.

The Faculty of Education and Social Work is a leading provider of teacher and social work education in Australia, embedded within a rich and diverse research culture. Our Faculty has strong undergraduate and postgraduate teacher education programs, with keen interest in the production of nationally and internationally conscious graduates.

The Faculty's foundation Education I-IV program offers core units of study across its undergraduate pre-service degrees. It links professional practice to broader theoretical and contextual understandings of educational activity drawn from fields in the social sciences related to education. The fields related to this position include Sociology and Comparative and International Education. Other areas of teaching in Education I-IV include Human Development, Early Childhood, Philosophy, Development Studies, Policy Studies, Economics and Anthropology.

To be successful in this position you will have:

- a completed PhD
- a broad social science background including expertise in Sociology of Education and Comparative and International Education
- the ability to design, teach, assess and coordinate undergraduate and postgraduate units of study
- research experience in your area of interest
- knowledge of current theory and practice in your field of research and teaching
- the ability to supervise professional experience placements
- experience working independently and as part of a team
- the ability and willingness to contribute to professional and community collaboration, academic administration and ICT for teaching and learning
- a commitment to Equal Employment Opportunity principles.

For appointment at Senior Lecturer level you will also have:

- evidence of a strong record of research and publications
- demonstrated experience supervising higher degree research students
- leadership skills.

This is an excellent opportunity for you to join an internationally renowned community of scholars, staff and students committed to community development, meeting social-development needs and improving teaching and learning. These outcomes are achieved through innovation and inquiry-driven programs, research, reflection and critique in partnership with our communities.
